The Department of Foreign Philologies and the Center for Near and Middle Eastern Studies (CNMS) invite applications for a permanent position as

Professor (W 3) for Iranian Studies

as of April 1st, 2021.

The successful candidate is expected to adequately represent the broad range of Iranian Studies on a contemporary and a historical level in both research and teaching at the Department of Foreign Philologies as well as at the Center for Near and Middle Eastern Studies. We expect an emphasis on modern Iran and a research focus in one of the following areas: literature, media, or language; society and history; shia, religious minorities, or gender. Experience in the successful acquisition of third-party funds is required.

In addition to a strong research profile in Iranian Studies, the successful applicant will have to teach in the BA programs "Near and Middle Eastern Studies" and "Interdisciplinary Literary and Cultural Studies" (with a focus on Iranian American Studies) and in the MA program "Iranian Studies." The successful candidate will also be responsible for the organization of Persian language classes and for the supervision of Ph.D. students in the field.

The CNMS has created an interdisciplinary academic working environment and expects the future colleague's openness for methods and research questions from other fields housed at the CNMS and at the Departments of Economics, the Social Sciences and Philosophy, and Foreign Philologies. We also expect the successful candidate to contribute to the research foci of Philipps-Universität Marburg.

If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact the Dean of the Department of Foreign Philologies, Prof. Dr. Carmen Birkle, at dekan10@uni-marburg.de.

Reference is made to § 61 and 62 Hessian Higher Education Law (Hessisches Hochschulgesetz (HHG)) and the conditions of employment based on § 62. Proficient knowledge of German is expected. Philipps-Universität Marburg highly values intensive supervision of students and Ph.D. candidates and expects of the successful candidate a marked visibility and presence at the university.

Philipps-Universität Marburg supports gender equality and, therefore, strongly encourages women to apply. Philipps-Universität Marburg positions itself as a family-friendly university and, thus, invites applicants with children to apply. Applications by disabled people of equal aptitude will receive preferable treatment, as described in SGB IX (§ 2, Abs. 2, 3).

Please send your application (including a letter in German or English stating your qualifications and teaching abilities, a CV, copies of certificates and diplomas, a list of courses taught, and a list of publications [publications themselves only upon request]) to the President of Philipps-Universität Marburg, Biegenstraße 10, 35032 Marburg, Germany, and to bewerbung@verwaltung.uni-marburg.de. Applications must be received by January 31st 2020.
