The aim here is, in particular, to promote food security while taking account of gender equality.

Your tasks will involve:

- Developing gender-sensitive approaches for conserving and sustainably using forest landscapes for food security in Eastern Africa
- Strengthening the alliance's scientific staff and its project partners in the area of gender-sensitive research
- Recording, evaluating and publishing research results on gender-relevant relationships between forest landscapes and food

Your profile:

- University-level degree in agricultural science, forestry or another subject that meets the position's requirements, ideally with a doctorate
- Experience in the area of gender-sensitive research
- Experience in sustainable food security
- Knowledge of organisational and policy advice
- Excellent English and good German
- In addition, you have the citizenship of an EU member state

What we offer:

- A varied and interesting job with a high level of responsibility in an international environment
- The opportunity to work with other organisations in the field of development cooperation
- Professional preparatory measures for your assignment abroad

- Placement with a local employer as an integrated expert for an initial period of two years, with an option to extend the contract
- Attractive monthly salary top-ups and social security benefits in addition to your local salary

Note: This is a current vacancy; there is no application deadline.
